The scanning protocol was as follows: 10 mm slice thickness; B30f matrix; large FOV; 154-mm field of view (FOV); and reconstruction of thin slices at 10 mm intervals. Patients were divided into two groups: group A, with a total score greater than or equal to 8; and group B, with a total score less than 8. In group A, 53% of coronary lesions were excluded by CT. The most useful technique was the reconstruction of the heart-lung interface, which visualized the presence of obstructive lesions in 5% of patients and reconstructed obstructive disease in 12% of the coronary arteries. In group B, 84% of the coronary lesions were excluded by CT. The sensitivity, specificity, and positive and negative predictive values of CT for the identification of coronary artery disease were 79%, 87%, 89%, and 79%, respectively. The overall diagnostic accuracy of this technique was 85%.Q: calling complete() inside require.js So I'm using the grunt-requirejs plug-in for grunt-requirejs to give me my dependencies. Looking at the plug-in source, the dependencyName property is automatically set to the name of the dependency. (I think). I'm wondering if it's possible to prevent it from calling complete? I'd like to run my requirejs.cfg, and then it's ready to be deployed to the server. I have a custom complete function that handles the server-side stuff, but I'd like to first run the require.js config. So basically, I want to do something like this: var r = grunt.file.readJSON('r.json'); require.config({"paths" : { "js/login-module" : r.path + '/js/login-module'}, "dependencies" : {"jquery", r.dependencies}, complete: function(){
