Comparison of the accuracy of tuberculin tests in guinea pigs infected with Mycobacterium tuberculosis and Mycobacterium bovis bacillus Calmette-Guérin. The skin reactivity of guinea pigs challenged with Mycobacterium tuberculosis and Mycobacterium bovis bacillus Calmette-Guérin (BCG) was compared using the conventional Mantoux test, the Delbrück test, and a new design tuberculin test. Tuberculin skin reactions were assessed with a fluorescent microscope at 48 h after injection. The two M. tuberculosis strains differed in the intensity of reactions and in the stimulation index (SI) of immune lymphocytes. Analysis of an averaged number of melanized giant cells revealed that BCG, the virulent variant of M. tuberculosis, induced higher numbers of giant cells than did nonvirulent M. tuberculosis or M. avium. With the two M. tuberculosis strains, the Delbrück test was superior to the Mantoux test in determining the degree of sensitivity to both tests, while both of the tests were unable to distinguish between BCG- and non-BCG-stimulated lymphocytes of guinea pigs, in accordance with results in man. The new design tuberculin test was not significantly different from the Mantoux test in its ability to distinguish between BCG- and non-BCG-stimulated lymphocytes of guinea pigs. and good times to make life easier.

It's a new year, though, and the world is changing. It changes by way of technology. The way we communicate, work and connect with others. It changes by way of the law. The privacy, data and information gathering laws that regulate the way the government and business interact with us through our digital world. It changes by way of education. Whether we choose to focus
