Former Trump campaign adviser George Papadopoulos poses for photos with a campaign poster outside the Sacramento Convention Center where he delivered a speech, "The Future of the West: Tackling Today's Challenges Together," in Sacramento, California, U.S., March 28, 2016. REUTERS/Evan Vucci George Papadopoulos, who for a few months served as a foreign policy adviser to the Trump campaign, has been informed by prosecutors that he may be among 10 witnesses called to testify before the former U.S. prosecutor's team. The investigation, which has so far netted charges against four Trump campaign officials and guilty pleas by two other individuals, is looking into allegations that Russia tried to meddle in the 2016 U.S. election, and whether Trump associates colluded with Moscow. The disclosure of Mueller's pursuit of the testimony of the Russian former officer came as he revealed a list of potential witnesses to be called to testify in the first prosecution brought under the Justice Department's newly created Cybercrimes and Intellectual Property unit. The unit,
