Microsoft OneDrive is a piece of software that is very useful for business and personal use. This program allows users to sync and backup files stored in their personal storage as well as in cloud storage. Now, the program developers have managed to add a Dropbox like folder called "OneDrive" which not only helps to sync OneDrive's files but also to backup other online storage accounts as well. The list of such cloud storage services that can be backed up using this new application includes: Google Drive, One Drive, Dropbox, Mega, Apple's iCloud, SkyDrive and many more. OneDrive can be easily installed using the Microsoft Store. After installation, all storage files are displayed in a folder named "OneDrive". There's no other way to access the files since they are stored in an online storage. The folder is located in the left column and every file is represented by a small file icon. You can access all the data in the folder by using the file manager. The folder also has special locations that enables you to search for files by content or a file's size, date of creation/modification, last modified, or by another criteria. Also, if you want to send an email to a specific file, you can do so without having to access the file manager. All you have to do is to right click on any file and select "Email file location". Getting files from OneDrive to another storage account If you wish to transfer files from OneDrive to one of the other cloud services, you can do so by exporting them as a collection of files. You may select specific files or the entire folder. To export files, you can either export a collection of files or select all files and export all of them at once. All files are saved in a collection in a folder named after the storage account. The collection also has a name that consists of account name, storage account name, plus the folder that you want to export. For example, if you want to export a collection of files from the OneDrive account named "notreally", you can create a folder on your local disk. After that, you can right click the folder and select the "Export..." option. You can select files or folder from OneDrive. Once you've created a collection and exported it to the local disk, you can access it in any cloud storage service by right clicking it and selecting the "Open folder in the cloud" option. This article shows you how to debug an issue with your Google Cloud Vision API installation. If you're ready to deploy, you'll see how to view detailed information about your Google Cloud Vision API, including your API Access Key and more. First, let's review the important terminology involved in configuring your Vision API: API Key ID: The username used to authenticate your Vision API request and to access your Google Cloud Platform account. This is a 16-character alphanumeric string. Access Key: The access key associated with your API key. It is a single set of six characters.

Project ID: Your API project. The project id identifies a specific project when you create a Vision API. The following exercise provides the information you need to get your Vision API up and running. Steps to debug a Vision API:

1. Go to the Compute Engine API console to create a Vision API.
2. Copy the Access Key and Access Key ID values for your project.
3. Open the following URL in a web browser:
4. Click the Service account dropdown menu and create an account to be used by the vision service: A new Image Annotator request will be generated, with your API project ID and the access key(s) you specified in step 2. The URL for the request will be similar to but without the `access_token` parameter. Open this URL and you'll see a new Image Annotator request.
5. Use the response from this request to save your Vision API for future use.

We can now discuss issues you might encounter when configuring your Vision API. Error messages you might see: If you're getting an error about missing credentials, check the following: Check the URL Ensure that you have logged into the correct project and that the access key(s) you specified are the correct values. If you're getting an error about invalid credentials, you need to define or create an API project that contains credentials that your application can use. For more information, see Create an API Project and the API credentials documentation. Use the documentation for the Vision API if you're not sure how to create an API project.
