A top Senate Democratic aide said the issue with the FBI investigation into Hillary Clinton's use of a private email server while secretary of state for the State Department is far from concluded. The aide said the Senate Judiciary Committee will subpoena Justice Department and FBI documents from the Clinton investigation and the email controversy could be a factor in the 2016 presidential race. Appearing on CBS's "Face the Nation," Sen. Chuck Schumer, D-N.Y., said any doubt about whether or not Clinton broke laws is "just not possible." "We believe Secretary Clinton was recklessly careless in handling extremely sensitive, highly classified information, and that through her negligence she jeopardized U.S. national security and violated the law," Schumer said. He said Democratic presidential candidate Bernie Sanders is "right in the middle" of the FBI investigation into her emails. The Justice Department's inspector general told the Senate Judiciary Committee that investigators would be conducting an "in-depth review of all the evidence collected in the Clinton email investigation," but that investigators have not found emails that indicated Clinton intentionally lied to investigators or investigators discovered new evidence indicating intentional lies. The committee's Republican chairman, Sen. Chuck Grassley of Iowa, said he is concerned that if the Justice Department files were incorrect or incomplete, that could delay prosecutions in the ongoing investigation of her use of a private server during her time as secretary of state. A high-level FBI source told CBS News that the investigation was "on track" and has been going on "steadily" since the conclusion of the Clinton email probe last summer. James Comey said in July that there was "no reasonable conclusion" that Clinton broke the law, but that she was "extremely careless" and there was evidence that "hostile actors" gained access to her private server. Schumer said Clinton is not lying when she says she was a public servant and that "she believes she did nothing wrong." "But somebody somewhere should say 'hey, what do we have here?'" Schumer said. conditions which must be met before such a ruling will be set aside: (1) A court, in the exercise of sound judicial discretion, may in its
