Aus The latest in defense and electronics for your love of the outdoors. A Guide to the Elements Weather is a big factor when you're out in the bush. Weather can be a blessing or a curse, depending on how you use it. As you carry out your expedition, it pays to be well equipped. Knowing about the elements you'll be dealing with is the first step to protecting yourself from the elements. There are five elements: air, fire, earth, water, and wind. All are vital to your survival. You need to be aware of what they can do to you and your gear. So before your next expedition, read up on the five elements. Air You don't need to wait for a thunderstorm to feel the sting of the wind. If you're climbing in a tree or bush you'll still feel the breath of a fast-moving storm. But a gentle breeze will do little damage, unless your equipment isn't strong enough to withstand the force of a gust. It's best to be well prepared when the weather is calm and look for winds to pass quickly through your gear. Water If you're in the outdoors you're very likely to encounter water. Whether it's a small creek or a flowing river, the element of water can cause problems. Depending on where you are, the temperature of the water can vary. Cold water will cause damage to your electronics, especially if you're out for extended periods. For example, some power banks can be damaged by the cold. If you're outside for more than two or three hours, you should bring along a portable water bottle. Fire Fire doesn't just burn. It can scorch your tent or backpack, or worse, it can destroy your gear. There's nothing you can do to stop a fire. Fire is the main enemy of backpackers. It appears that Spain and Catalans will not find a solution, but the significance of that response for the future of Catalonia is just the same as that of Spain and the Basque Country. Since the Nationalists, who have been in power for the past three years, made independence the centre of their political
