Cyclic liver disease is a clinically rare and potentially fatal disease manifesting with repeated recurrent jaundice, cholangitis, and acute cholangitis, ascites, or hepatoma. The disease is characterized by marked changes in the size of the liver, and therefore it can be confused with primary or secondary liver tumors. The ultrastructural appearance of the diseased liver in the early phase, such as the early parenchymal changes, normal architecture with bile ducts, and differentiation of hepatocytes into clear cells, reveals a specific pattern that may lead to the diagnosis. Furthermore, the characteristic sequence of parenchymal changes, which do not reach a peak when all hepatocytes in the liver lobule have been destroyed, may help to establish the diagnosis. A rare case is presented. Sheriff's deputies in Southern California shot and killed a man Monday when they mistook his car for a potential meth lab, officials said. The Riverside County Sheriff's Office said it responded to the call about an apparent lab around 3 a.m. at a home in the town of Redlands. The sheriff's department said it was dealing with a "possible meth lab" and contacted drug enforcement officials to help on the scene. When deputies arrived on scene, they saw a silver Ford SUV suspected of being involved in the alleged drug lab. But the car was sitting in a driveway and there was no chemical smell coming from the vehicle, so no one was immediately handcuffed, according to the sheriff's department. Officials said the deputies became suspicious after they questioned the driver, who had a felony warrant and was believed to be hiding inside the vehicle. When the deputies approached the vehicle, the driver started to drive away and a deputy fired at the car, hitting and killing the driver, identified as Ricardo Santos, 37, of Redlands. The deputies never found a lab in the area, said Sgt. Jeff Ferrell of the Riverside County Sheriff's Department. "The suspect and the vehicle were on scene before the medical examiner arrived," Ferrell told the Los Angeles Times. California law requires police to obtain a warrant before they can search

1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a process for the production of a novel block copolymer by living polymerization of ethylene with an alpha-olefin. More specifically, this invention relates to a process for the production of a polymer block copolymer having a tacticity of, for example, at least 95% based on units derived from ethylene, and the recovery of a catalyst useful in the production of such copolymer. The novel polymers of this invention have a molecular weight distribution ranging from about 1.5 to 20, preferably from 2 to 5, and a tacticity ranging from about 85 to 100%. The novel polymers of this invention can be used in the preparation of films and fibers and as viscosity modifiers for oil and lubricants.
2. Description of the Prior Art The production of olefin polymers by living (homogeneous) polymerization is known. In this process ethylene and an.alpha.-olefin, for example propylene, are polymerized with a single catalyst component. Living polymerization is also known to be useful for the preparation of block copolymers wherein ethylene and an.alpha.-olefin of the same kind are present in the chain. One advantage of producing polymer blocks by living polymerization is that the preparation of these polymer blocks can be performed, in many cases, in one stage of the polymerization. Although a process for producing alpha-olefin/ethylene copolymer by living polymerization is known, the utility of this process has been
