As I said the issue is: I do not know the file type I have because I gave the wrong link. In this case, please tell me which one is correct and if I have the right one, I'll delete the wrong link. A: Download the file, extract it and double click on the exe to start the install. If it opens in the program install and you get the option to try it with or without your Windows license you are good to go. There are many versions of iTunes and all of them have same functionality but, the most recent one is the best one. And if you can manage to manage all that does iTunes, you should try it. Q: How do I combine a client (or wall) clock with an NTP server? I'm using the CentOS box which is on our local network, and a remote Linux system which serves as a NTP server. This remote system (server) is in another room on the same local network. This setup works fine when the box is on the local network, but fails when the box is remote. The servers and clients are both running CentOS 7. A: There are a couple of options, either to add a route to the remote system to bridge the two networks, or to use 77a5ca646e
