Adobe Photoshop is a professional image editing software for...Opisthorchis viverrini and related trematodes in a remote and heavily infected area of Lao PDR. This study surveyed three villages near a westerly seashore of Lao PDR (Northwest Luang Prabang) in 1992-3 to investigate the presence and prevalence of the flukes Opisthorchis viverrini and Isospora spp. and the prevalence of Trichuris trichiura, and Hookworms. Inhabitants of the three villages were invited to participate. Questionnaire data were obtained and stools examined by the Kato-Katz method. Of 314 people interviewed, 67.7% were willing to provide stool specimens for examination. Of 363 stools examined, 20.3% were positive for O. viverrini. The overall prevalences of O. viverrini and Isospora spp. were 8.8% and 13.2%, respectively. This was well below reported prevalences in the same area in 1982 but comparable with prevalences in other areas of Laos and Southeast Asia. Stool examination also indicated a high prevalences of T. trichiura (12.4%) and hookworms (9.6%). Opisthorchis viverrini and Isospora spp. were not significantly associated with any of the demographic variables studied but those who had eaten raw "Hai Hor Khai" (freshwater fish) were less likely to harbor O. viverrini than those who had eaten other fresh water fish, including Leuconotus. Consumption of raw freshwater fish was also correlated with the prevalence of Isospora spp. The data presented were collected before the end of the War and before an era of "economic reforms". It is suggested that a new generation of Laotians may have been exposed to a different pattern of O. viverrini infection., Development and Applications of Generalized Functions, Birkhauser, 1992. As sanitary napkins for receiving excretion of a wearer, there have heretofore been known those of a permanent type which are fastened to a body of a wearer as by an adhesive portion formed on a back side of a crotch portion thereof, and those of a disposable type which are first fitted and fastened to a body of a wearer before they are discarded. The sanitary napkin of the permanent type has a serious defect in that it is not possible to take it off by rubbing with fingers of the wearer when it is soiled. On the other hand, the sanitary napkin of the disposable type has an advantage that it is possible to take it off by rubbing with fingers of the wearer when it is soiled, and hence it has widely been used. In recent years, however, from the viewpoint of sanitation, there has been a growing tendency to use sanitary napkins of the permanent type as sanitary napkins of the disposable type. With a sanitary napkin of the kind in question, when the adhesive portion is used for the fastening thereof to the wearer's body, it is very difficult to remove the adhesive portion from the wearer's body when the sanitary napkin has been loosened or is about to be loosened from the wearer's body. For this reason, there has been proposed a sanitary napkin of a disposable type which comprises a liquid-impermeable topsheet, a liquid-absorbent core, a liquid-permeable elastic sheet disposed between the topsheet and the core, and a liquid
